

Old Testament - Book Six

AND THE BIRD looked down upon the earth and saw that it was corrupted and filled with sin and inequities, and not the right ones: and so became sore enraged. And the Bird cried out, "I shall rain Carlton LoboTips upon the entire world for fawty days and fawty nights; and a similar number of Dusks and Dawns, or until all Life is vanished from the land, whichever comes first. For the earth is wicked and filled with dickheads and way too serious.

BUT there walked upon the earth a just and perfect man, relatively speaking, who was named NoahN, and he walked in the shadow of the Bird though he always wore a hat. And the Bird looked upon NoahN and was pleased, for there was about him an air of innocence and conviviality, and controlled substances; and he had a pretty good backhand. And the Bird said unto Herself (in a very low voice so that others would not think her Odd), "On second thought I will not allow all to be destroyed; I will save NoahN, and all who are with him!" Then the Bird was sore confused and had to repeat this several times before it sounded right, though others thought her Odd.

AND the Bird said unto Noah, "Go forth and constructith thee a Court upon the ground. Rectangular shalt thou layeth it, with yet further rectangles within contained, that they may be service courts; and thou shalt mark it with Lines to determine that which is in from that which is out. And thus shalt they be layed: the Length of them shall be twenty and seven cubits, and the Breadth twelve and one-half cubits each of them; and thou shalt place across the center a Net three cubits to the top of it. And when thou hast done all of these things, gather to thyself thy family and friends and all which hast the Spirit and an Entry Fee, and their Yonexes with them, that they may be spared."

AND Noahn didst build the Court, and gathered the Faithful about him, and a couple of Kegs as well; while outside there was butt wailing and the wetting of flesh.
